ABOUT MASTER OF EDUCATION PROGRAMS

Northeastern University's Master of Education (M.Ed.) programs are designed to empower professionals to lead meaningful change in education. Whether you work in schools, universities, or alternative learning spaces, you'll gain the tools to reimagine learning environments, influence policy, and create inclusive, future-ready education systems.

Delivered in a flexible online format, these programs bring together a global community of educators, administrators, and changemakers from across sectors. You'll collaborate with peers who reflect the diverse and complex realities of today's educational landscape.

Through industry-connected projects (Experiential Network), a capstone, and a professional ePortfolio, you'll apply what you learn to drive tangible outcomes. Across all programs, Northeastern's M.Ed. programs develop education leaders who bridge theory and practice to create systemic impact, with clarity, purpose, and intention.

UNDERSTANDING THE M.Ed. PROGRAMS

Designed to meet diverse needs in education, each Northeastern M.Ed. program is built to address unique educational challenges. Find the program that aligns with your purpose and aspirations.

Master of Education in Higher Education Administration

Provides the foundation to understand the structure, governance, and operation of various higher education organizations, integrating opportunities for students to discuss current trends and issues in higher education. The program offers a theoretical foundation and real-world application of the skills graduates need to excel in mid-level and leadership roles across higher education. Its scholar-practitioner model integrates academic research with practical application.

Master of Education in Learning and Instruction

Emphasizes designing engaging, inclusive instruction, implementing research-based assessment practices, and adapting to dynamic educational contexts influenced by social and institutional change. Graduates gain the expertise to lead meaningful educational transformations that support diverse learners and foster equitable, future-ready classrooms.

Master of Education in Special Education

Equips educators with the skills to support students with moderate disabilities through evidence-based instructional strategies, inclusive classroom practices, and effective implementation of Individualized Education Plans (IEPs). The program also explores the broader policy and systemic factors shaping special education, preparing graduates to advocate for equitable access and drive positive change within schools and communities.

WHAT MAKES THE NORTHEASTERN PROGRAMS UNIQUE

Experiential Network (XN)

Collaborate with industry partners on real-world projects through Northeastern's XN (Experiential Network), gaining valuable experience by contributing to real-time solutions across diverse educational settings.

ePortfolio
